Teton Folk-lore Notes

by J. Owen Dorsey (1848-1895)

This PDF is provided by www.Flutopedia.com as part of a collection of resources for the Native American flute. The full citation for this digital copy of the original source material is provided below, as well as the specific details of the source of this reference and how it was digitized (if known).

As part of the Flutopedia effort, extensive metadata (title, author, citation, etc.) has been encoded into this file. Select File/Properties in any Adobe product to view this information. You also can use text search on this document, based either on the OCR encoding done during the original digitization or during Flutopedia document preparation using the OCR facility of Adobe Acrobat 9 Pro.

Based on our best efforts, we believe that providing this material from www.Flutopedia.com to users in the United States does not violate any legal rights. However, please do not assume that it is legal to use this material outside the United States or for any use other than your own personal research and self-enrichment. Also, we cannot offer guidance as to whether any specific use of this material is allowed.

If you have any questions about this document or issues with its distribution, please visit http://www.Flutopedia.com/ for information on how to contact us.

Citation

Contributing source: Harvard University
Digitizing sponsor: Google, Inc.
Digitized by: Google Books on August 1, 2008
To cockle-burr is called wi nawizi, or jealous woman, because it takes hold of a man. When a Teton covered with these burrs enters a lodge, the other inmates ridicule him, saying, "Oho! you have a jealous wife." The thistle (Carduus) is called the toka hu or enemy plant. The Tetons attack it just as they would an enemy, beating it down, and giving the cry of triumph, "Aa-he!"

They believe that an elk can sing, and that he has a flute-like voice.

Wolf-Lore.—The man who met the ghost woman after fleeing from the two ghost men encountered a wolf, who pitied him and showed him the way to a camp, where he was received and adopted into the tribe. This man always remembered the wolf as a kind animal, and when he killed any game, he threw a portion outside of the camp, as an offering to the wolf.

There was once a handsome young Teton, whose wife's father disliked him and plotted against him. He dug a pit within his lodge, covering it with skins. Then he invited his son-in-law to a feast. The son-in-law met a wolf, whom he saluted, asking him the way to the village. The young man was persuaded to recline on the skins, which gave way, precipitating him into the pit. The father-in-law and his two single daughters covered the skins with earth, and removed their tent elsewhere on the morrow, when all the people started on a journey. After some days, the wolf who had met the man went to the deserted camping-place in search of food. On reaching the place where the accident (?) had happened, he heard a human cry. So he dug away the earth, removed the skins, and found the man, whom he recognized. The wolf pitied him, and said, "As you did not kill me when we met, you shall now be saved." So he howled, and very soon many wolves appeared. They found a lariat, which they lowered into the pit, and by grasping the other end with their teeth, they pulled the man up. He was very grateful, promising never to harm a wolf. Just then a weeping woman appeared, gazing in surprise at the man, as he was very thin, looking like a ghost. She was his wife, and her heart was soon made glad when he told her of his rescue.

Once upon a time a man found a wolf den, into which he dug to get the cubs. The mother came, barking, and she finally said to him, "Pity my children;" but he paid no attention to her. So she ran for her husband, who soon appeared. Still the man persevered. Then the wolf sang a beautiful song, "O man, pity my children, and I will instruct you in one of my arts." He ended with a howl, causing a fog. When the wolf howled again the fog disappeared. Then the man thought, "These animals have mysterious gifts," and he tore up his red blanket into small pieces, which he put as necklaces on the cubs, whom he painted with Indian red, restoring them to their place in the den. Then the grateful father exclaimed, "When you go to war hereafter, I will accompany you, and bring to pass whatever you wish." So they parted as friends. In the course of time the man went on the war-path. As he came in sight of a village of the foe, a large wolf met him, saying, "By and by I will sing, and you shall steal their horses when they least suspect danger." So they stopped on a hill close to the village, and the wolf sang, after which he howled, making a high wind arise. The horses fled to the forest, many stopping on the hillside. When the wolf howled again the wind died away, and a mist arose; so the man took as many horses as he pleased.

All the wolf stories belong to the Wolf Society, called Dog Society by the white people. That society has many beautiful songs, and its membership is confined to the young men.

Spider-Lore. — The Tetons pray to gray spiders, and to those with yellow legs. When a person goes on a journey, and a spider passes, one does not kill it in silence. For should one let it go, or kill it without prayer, bad consequences must ensue. In the latter case, another spider would avenge the death of his relation. When the spider is met the person must say to it, "Ikto'mi Tun-kan'-shi-la, Wa-kin'-yan ni'-kte-pe lo', O Grandfather Spider, the Thunderers kill you!" The spider is crushed at once, and his spirit believes what has been told him. His spirit probably tells this to the other spiders, but they cannot harm the Thunderers. If one prays thus to a spider as he kills it, he will never be bitten by other spiders.

Ikto or Iktomi (in Teton) and Unktomi (in Santee) are the names now given to the spider by the Dakotas, but the name belonged to a mythical hero, the Ictinike of the Omahas and Ponkas, and the Ictcifiike of the Iowas and Otos. Ikto, say the Tetons, was the first being who attained maturity in this world. He is more cunning than human beings. He named all people and animals, and he was the first to use human speech. Some call him the "Mocker" or "Monkey" (with which compare an African belief about monkeys having the gift of human speech). If we see any peculiar animals at any place, we know that Ikto made them so. All the animals are his kindred, and they are obliged to act just as he commanded them at the beginning. Though Ikto was very cunning, he was sometimes deceived by other beings. One day he caught the Rabbit, and the latter was about to fare hard, when a thought occurred to him. He persuaded Ikto to release him on condition that he taught his captor one of his magic arts. Said he, “Elder brother, if you wish snow to fall at any time, take some hair such as this (pulling out some rabbit fur), and blow it in all directions, and there will be a blizzard.” The Rabbit made a deep snow in this manner, though the leaves were still green. This surprised Ikto, who thought that he had learned a wonderful accomplishment. But the foolish fellow did not know that rabbit fur was necessary, and when he tried to make snow by blowing his own hair, he was disappointed.

On another occasion Ikto reached a stream which he could not ford. So he stood on the bank and sang thus:

```
To'kin ko-wa'ka-tan ma-ka'ni, e-chin'chin na-wa'zhin!
I stand, thinking often, Oh that I might reach the other side!
```

Presently a long object passed, swimming against the current. When it reached him it said, “I will take you across, but you must not lift your head above the water. Should you notice even a small cloud warn me at once, as I must go under the water.” Ikto was then told to give the warning thus: “Younger brother, your grandfather is coming.” Before the other bank was reached Ikto gave the warning, and so sudden was the commotion that Ikto became unconscious. On recovering, he found that the thunder was roaring, and the water was dashing high, but the monster had disappeared.

The Monster in the River. — Long ago the people saw a strange thing in the Missouri River. At night there was some red object, shining like fire, making the water roar as it passed up stream. Should any one see the monster by daylight he became crazy soon after, writhing as with pain, and dying. One man who said that he saw the monster described it thus: It has red hair all over, and one eye. A horn is in the middle of its forehead, and its body resembles that of a buffalo. Its backbone is like a cross-cut saw, it is flat and notched like a saw or cog-wheel. When one sees it he gets bewildered, and his eyes close at once. He is crazy for a day, and then he dies. The Teton people think that this monster is still in the river, and they call it “Mi-ni-wa-tu,” or sea monster. They think that it causes the ice on the river to break up in the spring of the year.

The Thunderers. — Some of these ancient people still dwell in the clouds. They have large curved beaks, resembling bison humps, their voices are loud, they do not open their eyes wide except when they make lightning, and they have wings. They can kill various mysterious beings, as well as human beings. Their ancient foes were the giant rattlesnakes, and the Un-kche-ghi-la, or water monsters, whose bones are now found in the bluffs of Nebraska and Dakota. Long ago, the Tetons encamped by a deep lake, whose shore was inclosed by very high cliffs. They noticed that at night, even when there was no breeze, the water in the middle of the lake was constantly roaring. When one gazed in that direction he saw a huge eye as bright as the sun, which caused him to vomit something resembling black earth moistened with water, and death soon followed. That very night the Thunderers came, and the crashing sounds were so terrible that many people fainted. The next morning the shore was covered with the bodies of all kinds of fish, some of which were larger than men, and there were also some huge serpents. The water monster which the Thunderers fought resembled a rattlesnake, but he had short legs and rusty-yellow fur.

Kan-ghi-ta-me, stones resembling coal, are found in the Bad Lands, and they are said to be the missiles of the Thunderers. When a person dreams of the Thunderers it is a sign that he and they must fight. The Thunderers are said to have beautiful songs.

When it stops raining, lizards, frogs, and toads drop from the clouds. In the olden times there were many large and venomous flying serpents. So the people had to wear garments of thick skins sewed on them, as the mere touch of one of these serpents caused sudden death. Many people were thus killed.

Once upon a time some people camped by a large, deep lake. Everything there was of abnormal size; e.g., the turnips were as large as our pumpkins, and the serpents' bodies seemed like the trunks of large trees; the frogs were as large as men of the human race; and under the water were giant people as well as huge turtles. An Indian who leaped on one of the turtles when it was on a hill thought it could not harm him, but it carried him into the lake, and, to his horror, he could not jump off in time, as his feet seemed glued to its back. From that time every one has refused to swim in that lake, or to fish therein.

Astronomical Lore.—Ho-ke-win-la is a man who stands in the moon with outstretched arms. His name is said to mean "Turtle Man." When the Tetons see a short man with a large body and legs, they generally call him "Ho-ke-la," after the man in the moon.

The Tetons do not like to gaze at the moon, because at some past time a woman, who was carrying a child on her back, gazed a long time at the moon, till she became very weak, and fell senseless.

No Teton dare look at the stars and count even "one" mentally. For one is sure to die if he begin to count the stars and desist before finishing. They are also afraid to point at a rainbow with the index finger, though they can point at it with the lips or elbow. Should one forget, and point with the index finger, the bystanders laugh at him, saying, "By and by, O friend, when your finger becomes large and round, let us have it for a ball bat."

Whirlwinds are caused by a chrysalis, called the wa-mni-yo-mni, which the Tetons say is found in the small of the back of some buffaloes.

The Tetons have a legend of the mermaid. A young wife abandoned her infant to her younger brother's care, and plunged into a stream, which became her home henceforth. She did this because her husband had scolded her. Before going to her new home she told her little brother to bring her babe to the shore whenever it cried for food, and to call her by singing thus:

\[
\text{Tan'ke, mi-tun'-shka-la che'-ye lo' che'-ye lo'!}
\]

That is, "Sister, my sister's son cries indeed, cries indeed!"

The brother obeyed her, and on calling to his sister, she appeared, and nursed the infant. But the boy perceived that the mother had become a fish from the waist downward. The cruel husband learned at last what had happened, and he plotted to entice his wife ashore. Having succeeded in this, he cut off all the fishy part of her, and carried her to his lodge, with her brother's aid. But she did not long survive, and the husband lamented his cruelty for many days.

There was once a man who could change himself into a grizzly bear. One day the people assembled to witness the act. They camped in a circle, in the centre of which they erected a special tent for the performance. The man told them to set up in the ground a cedar and some plum trees. Then they sang the grizzly bear songs. The mysterious man sat a long time with the grizzly bear skin over his shoulders. Then he began to cry like a bear, and with closed mouth he passed along around the circle, stopping at intervals to take a seat. Before they could see how it was done, he had become a grizzly bear, and was chasing the people, who scattered in all directions. He overtook one man, tore him to pieces, and devoured the body, leaving only the bones. This made all the spectators wail, but they were not afraid to gather up the bones in a blanket, which they took back to the tent of the slain man. Once more the bear was walking around the circle, and this time he was growling. All at once the slain man was restored to life! Then the bear shook the plum-tree, making many plums fall. Next he hit the earth with his paw, and pulled up turnips. After this he resumed his human shape. A small grizzly bear used to come out of his mouth and pass around the circle. Sometimes it was a serpent that came out, instead of the small bear. When either (or both?) came out the man fell to the ground, as if almost dying, so they soon returned into his mouth, when he recovered.

_The Flying Santee._—A certain father, who had just buried his beloved son, had been warned about one thing. It was said that a Santee usually went flying about the country, and he managed to steal the tongue of every dead person, whether the bodies were buried or placed on scaffolds, and that he mixed the tongues with medicine or else strung them together, when he had dried them, wearing them ("chu-ti-ch'in") over his right shoulder, across the breast, and under the left arm.

So when night came, the father thought, "Well, I will take my gun and lie by the grave of my son, and if the Santee comes I will kill him, have his body boiled, and invite some of the Santees to a feast. Then he was weeping again. Night came, and he lay under the scaffold. It was dark. He heard an owl hoot, making the woods resound, and then the father ceased weeping and was lying in silence. At length some large object flew to the scaffold and sat down by the bodies. He had just taken hold of the head of the dead youth, and would have pulled it to pieces, when the father shot at him and brought him to the ground. He dragged the corpse to his lodge, and that very night he commanded the women to boil part of it and hide the other part. The head was cut off with a knife and put in a bowl. The fingers and feet were tied to the medicine pack, with the string of tongues.

After daybreak the father sent invitations to some Santees to come to his lodge and bring their bowls. When they had eaten what he had given them, he said: "This is part of what you have eaten," and he pushed toward them a human head and a hand that were in a bowl. Then all were excited, saying, "Wa'-ho-ho-ho'!" From that time the Tetons have been feared by the Santees both by day and night, and the former do not respect the latter.

_The Double Woman._—In the olden times there was what they called "Win-yan nun-papi-ka," or The Double Woman, consisting of two very tall females, who were probably connected by a membrane. They dwelt in a lodge on a very high black cliff. They were always laughing immoderately, as if they were strangers to sorrow. On pleasant evenings they stood on a hill, where they amused themselves by swinging. Should any Indian see them, when he reached home he vomited something resembling black earth, and died suddenly. These women were skilful dancers, and they used to reflect rays of light by means of their mirror, just as the young Indian men do in sport. They jumped many times and sang this song:
Che'-pan-shi ku-wa'-ni-to' Tu'-wa le'-chi sho'-na mi'-cho-ze'.

"Cousin, please come over here! Some one waves a robe over in this direction at me. Ha! ha! ha!" Then they walked about. No one knew from what quarter the Double Woman was coming, and how the two lived was a mystery. There are many tall women found now among different Indian tribes who imitate the behavior of the Double Woman.¹

Bushotter's 72d story is about a man who could lengthen his arm or body, making them extend as far as he desired. His 81st story is about this earth. The Tetons believe that the hills were made to be the braces or supports of this earth when it is to be turned upside down. Then the Indians will dwell in darkness in the valleys beneath the hills. When the earth turns over it will do so slowly at first, then there will be a great noise. The people will catch hold of something between the earth and the sky, but they will fall down, down. On account of the apprehended disaster men say, "As it must be so, I will engage in war, so that I may smell of weapons when I am dead."

Deer women of the Tetons resemble the Wolf women of the Pawnees. Both tempt unwary youths whom they encounter away from the camp in solitary places. Should a youth yield to the woman's solicitations the result will be a sad one. As soon as he leaves her she will resume her natural shape. The youth will appear as if drunk or insane, and he will reach home with difficulty. His health will become impaired, and he will soon die. So now the hunters avoid any female that they see on the way. They hate the Deer women. The Deer women never speak, but in all other respects they resemble Indian women.

J. Owen Dorsey.

¹ John Bruyier and other Tetons at Hampton, Va., regard this story of the Double Woman as manufactured by Bushotter. But this character figures in two Santee myths in Rev. S. R. Riggs's collection, about to be published by the Bureau of Ethnology.—J. O. D.